ICI has collaborations with American Concrete Institute, Asian Concrete Federation, Singapore Concrete Institute, Concrete Institute of Australia, etc. ICI publishes quarterly Journal containing peer-reviewed technical papers, technical abstracts from about 40 journals. ICI has also brought out a number of publication and monographs on various related topics.

About The Conference

"Necessity is the Mother of Invention". When larger spans were required, an awakening came over 200 years ago to construct Cable Supported Structures. Akashi Kaikyo Suspension Bridge (4km long) is a fantastic example of 1991 m unsupported central span over Akashi strait in Japan.

Cable Supported bridges have three major categories, viz Cable Stayed bridge, Suspension bridge and Extradosed bridge. First came Suspension bridges, which, by virtue of their structural geometry, can provide larger spans than the other two categories. This type has one pair of main suspension cables and rest auxiliary vertical cables to support the bridge deck. This type is appropriate for large spans up to 2000m. Then came Cable Stayed bridges, wherein taller Pylon is required, and all cables support their share of bridge deck loads. This type is appropriate for spans up to 1200m. Vidyasagar Setu in Kolkata, Naini bridge in Allahabad, Bandra-Worli sea link in Mumbai and Signature Bridge in Delhi (under construction) are some of the finest Indian examples of this type. Extradosed bridges incorporate prestressing cables inside concrete as well as outside, which are connected to short Pylons. Such bridges are suitable for spans upto 300m. Nivedita bridge in Kolkata, Barapulla Phase 3 bridge (under construction) in Delhi are some of the finest Indian examples of this type.

Several major buildings such as Indira Gandhi Indoor Stadium in Delhi, have made use of cables to support large span roofs in a very efficient manner.

Being comparatively a new technology, ICI-NDC decided to conduct this event on Cable Support Structures with the following most relevant sub-themes:

Sub-themes

- Cable Stayed Bridges
- Extradosed Bridges
- Suspension Bridges
- Cable Supported Pedestrian Bridges
- Cable Supported Roofs
- Materials: Quality & Testing
- Foundation: Design & Construction
